Position: Senior Fellow for Chinese Economy, Asia Society Policy Institute – Code: 2218

FSLA Exemption Status: Exempt

SUMMARY:

The Asia Society Policy Institute is a think- and do-tank that tackles major policy challenges confronting the Asia-Pacific in security, prosperity, and sustainability. The Institute has a long-standing China focus and will this year open a dedicated China research center focused the full range of China's economic, political, technological, and other policies and trends.

Working under the leadership of President Kevin Rudd, the Senior Fellow for Chinese Economics leads and directs an economics research team engaged in original research, quantitative analysis, and policy projects.

RESPONSIBILITIES:

- Build, lead, and direct an economic research team in the completion of original research and quantitative analysis on the nature and direction of the Chinese economic system, assessment of China's macro-economic performance, Chinese economic and industrial policy, as well as related issues such as financial risks.
- Engage in the design, goal-setting, and implementation of economics and economic policy projects.
- Write and produce analytical reports, articles, and innovative data-driven digital products on the Chinese economy for internal and external audiences.
- Represent the Institute in both public settings and private, high-level briefings.
- Develop and implement strategies for promoting ASPI initiatives among local and global audiences and securing the attention and engagement of influential constituencies.
- Engage in other duties as assigned.
