Location: New York, DC or Asia Society Global Centers

Position: Senior Program Officer, Carbon Markets (Code 2008)

Introduction:

The Asia Society Policy Institute (ASPI) is a think- and do-tank that tackles major policy challenges confronting the Asia-Pacific in security, prosperity and climate. ASPI's climate work supports the development and implementation of ambitious and effective climate policies in Asia. Major areas of work include development of emissions trading systems (ETS) in China and across Asia, raising climate ambition and action and supporting achievement of net zero emission goals.

A Senior Program Officer will coordinate and help implement our climate projects that help to shape climate policy in Asia.

The position will support the Director of Asia-Pacific Sustainability. It is a 2-year, grant-funded position, with the potential for extension.

Responsibilities:

- Coordinate and draft reports, policy papers, media articles, and other project deliverables on carbon pricing, energy transition, net zero emission goals and other climate policy topics, within quality, time and budget constraints.
- Conduct desk research on status of emissions trading system development and related policy areas in China and elsewhere in Asia, as well as international best practice.
- Develop high quality materials for publication and coordinate their dissemination through various media outlets.
- Support development and delivery of online and in-person meetings, workshops, seminars and conferences, including all organizational and logistical aspects.
- Build and maintain relationships with key project stakeholders at Asian and international levels.
- Support development of project concepts and proposals for new fundraising.
- Provide all administrative support and budget tracking for ASPI climate projects.
- Engage in other duties as assigned.
